FULL CREDIT TO ROOSEVELT.

Naturally there is a crop of rumors following the agreement of two warring nations to patch up their differences. President Roosevelt, it is asserted, advised Japan not to make any claim to punative indemnity. The Japanese decline to answer any question concerning the part played by the President in the negotiations. From the Russians the statement is made that they have information that Emperor William worked hard for peace, backing up President Roosevelt's efforts in that

There is a disposition here to give the President full credit for having brought about the peace agreement, and with the excitement of yesterday gone, and the opportunity of calm consideration furnished. the action of Japan in withdrawing her demand for money is not being subjected to that degree of criticism which prevailed when the terms of the agreement became known. This criticism was as marked among the friends of Japan as it was among these whose sympathies were with Russia. THE JAPANESE POSITION.

Over night, however, a change became prerent, and the disposition is growing give the victorious people of the Far East the credit of having performed an act of almost moredible magnanimity for the sole sake of ending a war that could have been continued without danger to their own cause but would have cost many thousand lives.

granting Russia any concessions, and particularly against consenting to peace unless a heavy indemnity were guaranteed by the Czar's Government, makes the conciliatory attitude of the Mikado and his advisers, as viewed in Portsmouth. little short of astonishing. The Japanese who are here are deeply disappointed over the suscome, for they had been impressed with the idea that their country required money and could not afford to cease fighting until their demand for remuneration had been granted by the enemy.

But the supposition that the Tokio Goverament was guilty of a cowardly act in conceding what Russia laid down as the price of peace is not now so strongly supperted in some quarters as it was in those seme querters vesterday. It is maintained by those who are inclined to praise the course of the Emperor that, while the Russian envoys may have achieved a diplomatio riumph, Japon gained a great moral victory in showing the world that she could be mous and in giving practical proof that the "yellow peril" was more visionary then real

Speculation on these lines leads to little result, however, for no official explanation is forthcoming from the Japanese plenientieries of the determining reason for the concessions made by their sovereign. They are standing by their general statement of last night that the Emperor had been actuated by "the dictates of humanity and dvillation" in agreeing to withdraw the conditions which Russia refused to

To what extent the decision of the Emteror was influenced by the realisation that if the conference split on the indemnity question the cry would go up that Japan was continuing the war at the expense of thousands of human lives for the sake of money and money alone it is impossible to say with any degree of definite knowledge in the face of the silence which the Japanese envoys maintain.

That Mr. Witte placed his adversaries in a disadvantageous position by repeated sions until only the matter of money and the transfer of a rather unimportant sland stood alone as obstacles in the pathway to peace, there appears to be little reason to doubt. But in the silence that prevails at Tokio and in the quarters of the Mikado's envoys at Portsmouth, it is beyoud the right of any man outside of the few who were concerned in the determination of Japan's conciliatory course to claim to possess the absolute knowledge that fear of the world's opinion compelled the withdrawal of the demand for monetary re-

WILL NEVER FORGET ROOSEVELT. Tribute From Chanceller Von Buelew -German Press Also Praises Him. .

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. BERLIN, Aug. 30 .- The Norddeutsche Allegemeine Zeitung, speaking on behalf of Chancellor von Buelow, says that the conclusion of peace confirms the view that Russia's power of resistance is practically unbroken despite her military failures. It acknowledges the moderation of Japan.

It concludes by saying:
"The services President Roosevelt has rendered will stand out brightly in the history of our days. It was a piece of hard, but wonderfully done, statesmanlike work. Humanity, which needs peace for its development, will never forget the name of

The comments of the press are generally of a similar tenor. The warmest praise is given to President Roosevelt and to Japa.1 for her moderation, while admiration is expressed for Mr. Witte.

PARIS PRAISE FOR ROOSEVELT. Press Says Whole World Should Offer Thanks to Him.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN Parts, Aug. 80. The press unanimously attributes the outcome of the peace conference to the initiative of President Roosevelt, whom the editorials warmly eulogize.

The Matin says: "Whatever is said or done Roosevelt is the great conqueror in this combat of giants, and the gallant and obstinate fight which he alone in the civilized world made for the triumph of the cause of peace is the most admirable feat of arms of which a people can be proud."

The Echo de Paris says: "The result is due to one man, Roosevelt, and to the effeet of the Anglo-Japanese treaty, now on the eve of renewal. Not merely the combatants should be grateful to the President, but the whole world offers thanks to him.

DURHAM, N. H., Aug. 30.-Samuel D. Clemens (Mark Twain) said to-day: "Russia was on the high road to emancipation from an insane and intolerable slavery. I was hoping there would be no peace until Russian liberty was safe. I think that this was a holy war in the best and noblest sense of that abused term and that no war was ever charged with a higher mission. "I think there can be no doubt that that mission is now defeated and Russia's chains reriveted, this time to stay. I think the Czar will now withdraw the small humanities that have been forced from him and resume his medieval barbarisms with a relieved spirit and an immeasurable joy. I think Russian liberty has had its last chance, and has lost it. "I think nothing has been gained by the peace that is remotely comparable to what has been sacrificed by it. One more battle would have abolished the waiting chains of billions upon billions of unborn Russians, and I wish it could have been fought. I hope I am mistaken, yet in all sincerity I believe that this peace is entitled to rank as the most conspicuous disaster in political history."

That Russia will soon begin to raise a large sum of money in Europe is generally believed. The loan will probably be placed in instalments and the first sum will be raised in the immediate future. Whether certain American bankers will float a Russian loan depends largely upon Russia's willingness to make concessions to the Jews. A conference took place yesterday at which representatives of J. P. Morgan & Co. discussed the question of a Russian loan with President Stillman of the National Bank and President Baker of the First National Bank.

LOST LEGION IS MOVING ON.

GOOD-BY TO PORTSMOUTH WHERE NEXT TO MEET?

At the Center of World Interest, Whether That May Be With the Troops or With the Peacemakers - Correspondents Hold Their Farewell Social Session.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Aug. 30 .- It is all over but signing the treaty, and the lost legion is packing to leave. Weird, foreign looking baggage, spotted with labels of hotels from Cape Town to Skagway, is going away by truckloads. There's a babel of farewells in the lobbies—Russian, French, English and Japanese running in streams. The palm garden is nearly deserted. The show is over. This was the greatest convention of the international correspondents ever held in this country ever held in any country under one rooffor at the Dreyfus trial and the like they were scattered through many hotels.

There was a kind of farewell meeting in the palm garden last night. The regular guests had gone to bed. Except for the correspondents, only Gov. McLane, Secretary Peirce and a few dignituries were about. Fifty men sat about in a circle making the night cheerful. The chairman by universal acclaim was an American of the Gridiron Club. He was flanked by a Russian whose business pard states that he is a gentleman of the Emperor's beddhamber and by a Frenchman with the little red ribbon of the Legion in his buttonhole. As the chairman passed the word down the line that every gentleman must tell a story, sing a song or contibute 50 cents to the pot, he had response from ten nations, if you count Ireland as a nation. Ireland got full recognition in this assemblage. At the foot of the table sat one small Jap who had recovered from his depression enough to join the company. He slipped in with a smile which was an apology for his existence and expressed the hope, when his turn came to speak, that America and Japan would meet again with a frequency.

'A big Englishman, a sailor of many see and a rider of many steeds, eat at the left of the Jap. All of a sudden he smote his hand on the table and cried: "By Jove, that's rippin'.

"What's rippin'?" said the chairman. Will the human moving van kindly eluci-

"When are we going to meet again? said the Englishman. "Think of what will be happening when we meet again."

It set them thinking. "When shall we meet again," that's a commonplace of parting. But this is different, far different. Wherever these men come together again the guns will be drumming in wars yet unbeard of, kings will be dying, nations torn asunder, some Dreyfus case whose causes are still working underground will have broken the earth.

It set the imagination buzzing. Some anxious morning, when glory is twenty miles before and the wire 100 miles behind, you will be riding through the dust. sneezing pack train will come out of the cloud, and behind it a man in khaki and a cap, with the field glasses, badge of his trade ! handing under his arm. He'll dismount as you pass, throw back his cap and show a face that looks familiar somehow, revives a faint and pleasant memory.

"Hello, Jones," he'll say, "don't you remember me? We were at Portsmouth

"Why, Smith—do you remember Rosen in the palm garden?" "And Sato's statements——" "And the Hollyhock girl?"

Perhaps it will be the Balkans. To most of them that seems the most likely choice for the next meeting place. But wherever it is things will be moving in the world when the lost legion meets again. MME. ROJESTVENSKT'S DOG.

In appears that the peace announcement of yesterday was broken by one gonfalon war, wild war. Mme. Rojestvensky was sitting on the piazza, crocheting and holding in her lap her fuffy chow dog. That pup has been compared by the humorsts of the convention to a great many things, including an earmuff. He is an amiable little dog. It is believed that he wags his tail when a friend approaches. At least, there is a kind of a ripple along the hair above the spot where the tail must be. In the excitement of the moment Mme. Rojestvensky forgot her dog for the first time. She dropped him and rushed forward to confirm the news. Along the planua strolled Di, mother of the Went-worth's family of Boston terrier pups. The peace convention has been signed for Di. Her tooth just now is against every dog who doesn't belong to her family. found the chow dog sitting in an armchair trying to find sounds to express his feelings at being deserted by his mistrees. Di swung into action. She got only a bite of brown hair. Surveying the situation critically, she changed her plan. She picked the chow up by the brown scruff of his woolly neck and started to remove him to a place where she could perate at her leisure.

The sound of war brought Mme. Rojest vensky shricking to the piasza. Two chauffeurs and a coachman, the only people who had not deserted the pleasa to a peace, pried Di's teeth apart with the butt of a buggy whip and rescued the chow. Only his sensibilities were hurt. Di hadn't found any solid place to bite.

One of the rapid fire humorists was waiting in the lobby of the Russian quarters to-day when the chow dog happened along and expressed himself in a sound between a cough and a yelp

"What gentleman of the Russian suite did you mention, sir," asked the humorist.

He had that done the day he enlisted to show where he had come from and what he proposed to do. Capt. Hank's boat has been the only cheap thing about the hotel. It was overlooked by the management. It holds twelve people and costs a dollar an hour whether you carry one or a dozen. Those who have known this secret have guarded it with care.

But the conference is over, and it is called to
